

Research Seminar at MAE: Rules and Requirements (2026-2027)

This document contains a list of rules regulating the participation of MAE students in the NES research program. The Research Seminar is an intrinsic ingredient of the NES academic process. Meeting its requirements is obligatory for all second year students. The Research Seminar is regulated by articles of Chapter 8 of the MAE Charter (“Reglament”), by “On the regulation of completing Term Papers and Master’s Theses in the 2026-2027 academic year”, and by the current document.

1. During the second year of studies, each student must participate in the Research Seminar (RS) as a member of a research group. The purpose of RS is to give students the skills of doing research and presenting research results, and provide efficient supervision of students’ research work. During this process a student must write and defend a Term Paper (TP) and Master’s Thesis (MT). A student receives 2 credits for completing the requirements of the Research Seminar.
2. Each research group contains project leader(s) and students assigned to the project. Research groups are encouraged to meet together with other groups with similar interests. The meetings run during modules 6 and 7 at least three times per module. At least one RS meeting should be held in the first year before the summer vacations.
3. One time slot of 2 academic hours per week is reserved in the regular timetable. A RS may be held at some other time convenient to all members of the research group.
4. Each student assigned to a research project must attend all research meetings, as well as NES research conferences. The research leaders are required to keep track of student attendance when setting off RS credits. Attendance below the 66% level in a module or non-attendance at conferences may lead to a failure to pass RS (see item 8), as well as a reduction or deprivation of financial support.
5. Each student must give a presentation at least 3 times during RS (not counting MT defense, see item 10). One of these presentations is delegated to the Spring research conference, another one is a defense of TP. Not giving a presentation at the Spring research conference automatically leads to a failure to pass RS in the module when the conference is held (see item 8).
6. During the period designated by academic rules, student supervisors must read and evaluate students’ TP using a NES conventional point scale. Apart from TP itself, this grade is based on the defense of TP in RS (preferably, combined with other research groups with similar interests), active participation and satisfaction of the attendance requirements in modules 6 and 7. The TP grade is incorporated into the academic transcript and is worth 2 credits.
7. During an academic year student supervisors must evaluate in each module the performance of students assigned to their projects. In evaluation, the binary scale (pass/no pass) is used. The evaluation is based on satisfaction of the attendance requirement, quality of presentations, active participation in discussions, meeting deadlines of submission of TP, MT and abstracts. A failure to pass the Research Seminar in a module implies that to make it up the student must submit referee reports of all papers having been considered at RS in this module, or do some other comparable research work. A no pass must be made up by the middle of the following module, otherwise it counts as a final grade. A no pass for RS is equivalent to a non-satisfactory grade for an obligatory module course.
8. At the end of the academic year student supervisors summarize module RS grades into a yearly RS grade according to the binary scale. A necessary condition to passing the Research Seminar is passing all four module RSs. The yearly RS grade is incorporated into the academic transcript.

9. Each student must defend the MT at a meeting of the State Attestation Committee (SAC) in June. The defenses are scheduled by the Program Directorate. SAC makes a decision on the MT grade based on the reports of project leader(s) and referee, as well as on the presentation at the defense.
